.02.13 Hi,i am new at this forum, and new at this site too. I have a question that may be easy for you to answer. A friend of mine borrowed a PC of a friend of mine to watch movies. He is Windows XP user, and when he was watching a movie, some windows were not minimized, so he opened a dialog box and closed them, but after finishing the movie, I dont know why, but when he started to watch another movie, and click on "start", the next movie was "Windows XP home" instead of the movie he was watching before, and it did not respond at all. This windows was installed using a new CD of Windows 7 SP1. I tried some things, but all I got was a blank black screen, it was like a "Windows XP Home", but did not respond at all. I tried to connect to another network, and Windows 7 responded at all, and I thought it was the problem, but it started again, this time Windows 7 was "Windows XP home". I was wondering if anybody could help me fix this, or maybe if someone can tell me if this is some kind of virus or something, or what can I do. I found something on the Internet that I cant understand, it was saying that I need to turn off the "startup repair" option, and change the "scratch disk", and change the profile of the user, but I have no idea how to do any of that. The computer was also stolen a couple of years ago, and I do not remember what the "scratch disk" is, or what "profile of the user" is. Please help me. Hi and thank you for your reply, and i am sorry for not responding. The following is what I have found on the Internet that I can understand: In a new setup, the "scratch disk" is a disk, or you can say a CD/DVD. You can find a CD/DVD in the package that comes with Windows. You have to choose it from the "CD/DVD drive", and you will find something like this: If you have this CD, you can use it to install the Windows you have. But you have to put it on the CD/DVD drive of the computer you want to install it, and it is most likely that the CD/DVD drive has to be on the "master" side of the computer.
